Today's music invites us to consider what it means to keep our hearts centered on what endures. As we pray for God to be our vision, we are reminded that faith begins by learning to see the world differently—measuring our lives not by riches, praise, or passing desires, but by the presence and purposes of God. Before hearing the Word, we ask Christ to meet us in the sacred page and shape us by truth that remains. And as we are sent, we renew the promise to follow faithfully, even when other voices compete for our attention. In a world that is always changing, today's music points us again toward the One who remains.
